With one sister dead, and the justice system failing them, all six surviving Welsh sisters had to fight to survive. One by one they decided to run away from an abusive home life, gaining freedom, but losing each other. When Ashlee Welsh finds a letter amongst her friend's belongings, she becomes both curious and jealous, and decides to write to this mysterious "Sarah". In these letters, Ashlee shares the secret lives of her sisters and herself: the most important decisions they ever had to make and the consequences that follow. And as Ashlee searches for Sarah's identity, she learns to find one of her own. For Sarah captures core emotions that readers will identify with, leaving them the belief that there is hope in all circumstances. For Sarah is for everyone.

Community is an evolving and complex concept that historians have applied to localities, counties, and the South as a whole in order to ground larger issues in the day-to-day lives of all segments of society. These social networks sometimes unite and sometimes divide people, they can mirror or transcend political boundaries, and they may exist solely within the cultures of like-minded people. This volume explores the nature of southern communities during the long nineteenth century. The contributors build on the work of scholars who have allowed us to see community not simply as a place but instead as an idea in a constant state of definition and redefinition. They reaffirm that there never has been a singular southern community. As editors Steven E. Nash and Bruce E. Stewart reveal, southerners have constructed an array of communities across the region and beyond. Nor do the contributors idealize these communities. Far from being places of cooperation and harmony, southern communities were often rife with competition and discord. Indeed, conflict has constituted a vital part of southern communal development. Taken together, the essays in this volume remind us how community-focused studies can bring us closer to answering those questions posed to Quentin Compson in Absalom, Absalom!: "Tell [us] about the South. What's it like there. What do they do there. Why do they live there. Why do they live at all."
